A doctor from Sierra Leone, one of the nations worst hit by the Ebola outbreak, said that people infected with the virus were not aware they were infected with the disease. Speaking to the Associated Press, Dr. Samba Sow, who has been caring for patients in a London hospital, said: "I don't think that people know that they are infected. Patients say they are feeling better, but they are not feeling better." Ebola is fatal, and the disease is characterized by high fever and vomiting. Untreated, the virus can kill within as few as two weeks, while symptoms can last up to three months. The World Health Organization has declared a global Ebola outbreak, and a doctor is being treated at Royal Free Hospital in London after displaying symptoms consistent with the disease. Around 26 people have died of Ebola in Sierra Leone, Guinea, and Liberia, and health officials have said that the outbreak is likely to spread even more. Although Ebola has never been transmitted from person-to-person, health officials are concerned that the disease could spread more widely. One sign that people have been infected with the virus is when a person becomes an asymptomatic patient, when they are aware of their infection but have no symptoms of the disease. Experts have called for stricter screening procedures in countries where the disease is at its worst, and doctors have advised that blood tests should be conducted for all patients, even if they show no symptoms. The World Health Organization has promised to deliver experimental Ebola vaccines to all countries where the disease has reached. The organization's head, Margaret Chan, said: "I cannot yet say I have a plan for outbreak control. That's why it's a race against time, and we need to find a cure."
